The adrenaline rush of San Diego's Comic-Con International has descended and now superhero, zombie, and vampire costumes are quietly hibernating in spectator closets until next July. It takes a lot out of you to survive all four days of walking, waiting, and sitting — then having enough energy left-over for some of the Gaslamp/East Village festivities afterward.

Comic-Con is like no other event; to describe it — one would have to say it's roughly — like Halloween, Mardi Gras, Carnival, and the Scream Awards all wrapped in one. Given the magnitude of this event
